Al almirante Blas de Lezo, con sólo tres mil hombres y seis navíos a su cargo, se le ha encomendado la defensa de Cartagena de Indias. Frente a él se prepara el desembarco más audaz de todos los tiempos: Inglaterra ha enviado doscientas naves y casi treinta mil hombres para arrasar la ciudad. Cualquiera en su sano juicio se habría rendido de inmediato. Cualquiera excepto Lezo. Blas de Lezo es Mediohombre, Mediohombre el estratega más genial de todos los tiempos. Esta es su historia y la historia de una defensa heroica y singular: el Sitio de Cartagena de Indias. Una gran novela de aventuras, en la que una brillante reconstrucción del hecho histórico y un ritmo trepidante mantienen al lector enganchado de la primera a la última página, acercándonos a un episodio olvidado de la historia en el que se impusieron el ingenio y el Mediohombre valor.

Un libro bastante flojillo. Es la historia del sitio de Cartagena de Indias por los ingleses con Blas de Lezo Mediohombre como comandante de la plaza. A pesar de que la historia en sí es muy interesante Mediohombre el autor de este libro no le saca mucho partido. Empezando porque no cuenta en absoluto nada Mediohombre sobre el contexto de la guerra, Mediohombre y mira que la historia de la oreja no daría para un buen libro. Luego los personajes ingleses son a cual más tonto, algo poco creíble. En una escena dos (2) españoles se pasan a bayoneta a cien (100) ingleses que no hacen nada para impedirlo, ni luchan ni corren ni disparan los mosquetes cargados que llevan en las manos. Además, y más allá de las habituales licencias que se toman los autores de novela histórica con los hechos históricos de los que hablan, el autor se pasa un poco para mi gusto con ese ultimate en plan "Y va y se acaba" que poco tiene Mediohombre que ver con lo que en realidad sucedió. Y por encima de todo eso el estilo simplón y los personajes planos (hasta Blas de Lezo) me hacen poner este libro entre los peores que he leído en los últimos años.
